OUTDOOR LIVING

Blurring the lines for all seasons, these designs are careful and inviting, no matter the weather

By Larry W. Garnett, FAIBD, House Review Lead Designer

Carefully designed outdoor spaces can greatly enhance adjacent indoor square footage by providing additional living areas. While strategically placed courtyards bring natural light to rooms located near the central portion of a home, expansive porches and loggias offer functional spaces overlooking pools and outdoor kitchens.

Although these outdoor areas add value to single-family designs, they also become essential for amenity centers and clubhouses. The following designs from our House Review team present several unique ways to merge the indoor and outdoor living areas.

The luxury coastal village of Sea Summit was developed for move-up and established families, as well as lifestyle buyers. Carved into sandstone bluffs rising 100 feet above the Pacific Ocean, it occupies the last parcel of undeveloped land in the popular seaside town of San Clemente, Calif. The Summit Club is situated on a prime bluff-top site and was designed with a cohesive blend of traditional materials and intricate detailing to reflect the rich heritage and charisma of this seaside hamlet.
